6.2.18				and they do not have access to the Defence Records Management System (DRMS) that would normally generate a file reference number. Further filing is done in DRMS by Defence at a later date but DoD still refer to correspondence with a resident by their residential address.
6.2.18	10.3 Request a response to the following - In the Executive Summary of IHHRA, the Section – Conceptual Site Model lists two migration pathways namely Leaching to groundwater and Leaching and surface water run-off. In view of the several sinkholes in the Katherine area, and particularly within Tindal air base, has Coffey’s considered a third migration path to the aquifer of surface run-off entering the sinkholes.	DoD/Coffey’s	Compete	The sinkholes represent a preferential pathway for surface water to infiltrate to groundwater. The overall process is the same, it is just faster via a sinkhole. The same occurs in reverse at the end of the wet season, where groundwater may discharge out of a sinkhole. Again the groundwater would discharge to the surface anyway through seeps, but the process occurs much faster through the sinkhole. The presence of sinkholes doesn’t change the interpretation of the overall migration pathways or the exposure to receptors.
6.2.18	10.4 Arrange a date for a site visit to Tindal.	KPCCG Chair/DoD	Complete	1 May 2018 KPCCG meeting to be held at RAAF Base Tindal, including tour.

Action Item Update

6.2.18	The Draft Final report of the Pepper Fracking Inquiry includes information that the flow rates of the Tindal aquifer is 10m/year in the southern section and 1000m/year in the northern section. Could Coffey's confirm that they have taken advice from a hydro geologist in analysing the flow patterns between Tindal and the Katherine river?	DoD/Coffey's	Complete	In preparing our hydrogeological conceptual model, we have referred to information available from NT government on the Tindall Aquifer. This information has been developed by DENR's hydrogeologists over many decades and many studies. The reports have been interpreted by our in-house hydrogeologists and in discussion with local NT groundwater specialists (including DENR and PWC hydrogeologists). Due to the Karstic formation, water velocities will vary greatly between cave systems and smaller fracture networks in massive rock. Flow rates will also vary between wet and dry seasons when the driving force changes. Further information is presented in the DSI report, which has now been published.
6.2.18	10.6 KTC to provide details on tourism marketing strategy for Katherine for the coming dry season.	KTC		KTC is working with Tourism NT. Marketing campaigns now word of mouth driven. Tourism NT is monitoring any comments in relation to PFAS on social media and is not seeing any close co-relation. Monitoring will continue over next 3 months and will be working to put a campaign together should there
